Dreeeeaaaam: I had super speed and passed cars on the highway!
I was a wittle blue bird trapped in a school classroom for my entire life. Some wild animals set me free through the sunroof! Must, learn, to, fly. I stole Santa's sleigh again. Get out a my dream Steve!
Awww! Robin played Mario cart with me!!! And I let him win a few times! Snuggles air, wishing it was Robin

My brain hurts, I spent half the night pretending to be mentally disabled so people wouldn't get suspicious about why I was at a carnival specifically reserved for disabled peoples. I am mental, but it doesn't normally show. I was worried they'd kick me out if they didn't think I was mental enough... Its not that hard to pretend. Use shorter sentences and make your voice sound slightly weirder, then do some awkward movements with your body like you can't sit still.

What in the name of dreams? Last night I dreamed about being at school, and the building was really a combined image of the old location and the new location. I come out the back entrance and Steve tells me to use the front entrance like the rest of the kids, so I do. The steps are after the front locked door, but I think my brain was just having some trouble remembering. I went into the main room and we sat down for circle time. The floor was like a trampoline for some reason. All I remember after that was looking for Robin but I failed to see his face again. Oh how I miss those days...

Ok, so my project for the weekend is to make a song!
What I have so far...

You've gotta kiss the light goodbye,
If your afraid to die!

And now I'm afraid to open my eyes,
Cause the only thing I'd see, would be darkness enfolding me!

There's something i need to get out. I've finally fitted my friend into a story i've dreamed fiercely for months. i think i can write it now...

(Section one)

Nelly shot out of bed at the sound of her ringing alarm clock. Her heart beat with anticipation, it was the first day of high school. She knew what it meant and it made her heart skip a beat. She was finally at the same school with Baxter. Tho She was now in ninth grade, Baxter was in 11th, and had quite the age head start on her.

After getting dressed in the brightest, blue-est clothes she had, she ate a big breakfast and headed of to school.

The bus dropped her off, and she hung back and waited for the large herd of children to leave and the bell to ring. She couldn't stand crowds like that, and had special permishion to walk into school 5 minutes late after the chaos had settled.
Sadly, this meant she couldn't scoure the crowds for baxters face. I mean, she hasn't seen him in what? 3 years? It didn't matter, she still loved him with every drop of her heart and she embraced it on the inside.

"Hello Nelly! Are you ready for your first day of school?" Said her questionably perky teacher Mrs. Markus. "I hope i am!" Nelly responded, mocking Mrs. Markus's perky tone, and she was glad that her teacher never seemed to notice.
Being locked up for most of her hours in the special ED room was still annoing but it got her out of homework, most of the classes, and being in crowds.

Nelly walked away from school with sure footing. She hadn't seen Baxter but she knew there would be tomorrow for that, and she took a seat on her bus.
Heart lurching, she noticed Baxter sitting 2 seats behind her. She was going to ride every single bus home with him! She peaked over the back of her bus seat every few minutes, studying him. He grew his hair out again, considering the last time she saw him his head was shaved. He still seemed.. Himself. And he was still wearing that golden chain necklace, given to him by his grandfather.

The bus lurched and it sent her smacking into the front of her seat. "The bus is broken kids, i guess your gonna have to wait while i fix it." called the bus driver from over his shoulder. "Should take about 40 minutes, do what ever you want while i fix it."
Nelly's strong sense of hearing picked up talking form Baxter's seat. The red head sitting next to him spoke, "Hey Bax, why don't we go explore the forest for 40 minutes? It'll be fun." She saw Baxter shrug. "Why not, while the other kids play games on there phone we'll be having a real adventure!"
Her heart started to beat faster. He was always adventurous, and kind, and funny. I wish i could just go over and talk to him. We were best friends once, even if he moved away and just moved back this summer. As Baxter and his friend left the bus, Nelly walked out behind them, careful not to seem to 'stalky'.
When they got off the bus Nelly pulled out the biggest amount of courage she could find and walked up to them. "Baxter?" She called somewhat softly. Baxter spun around and looked at her. "Do you, remember me?" Nelly said and took off her glasses. "Nelly?" His eyes lit with curiousity. "Jay, will you leave me to talk for a second?" Said Baxter to the red head. "I'll, just be over there..." Said jay, and he moved away.
"It's been three years, i thought i'd never see you again. At AHTL, Rosy said you were moving back." Nelly said, ever so slightly choaking up. "Your still there?" Baxter looked me over. "Well i'm out of school program. I still go for summer and after-school on mondays and fridays." I watched him carefully. "You've lost weight..." I said as an attempt to compliment him. "So have you."
Akward silence followed and i just couldn't take it anymore, "Why did you leave?!" i blurted out.
He started at me for a moment before responding. "Leave?" His eyes looked puzzled. "Leave! You moved and i was so clueless to where you went! I was hoping by then you would have learned i need to be told, i'm not telepathic and it was only after you left did i learn we might have actually been dating!" Nelly yelled and slumped onto the ground. She saw Jay back away and go onto the bus. "Just forgot it. Maybe we should go for a walk."
Baxter nodded and lead the way through the forest on the side of the road. "I didn't know that you didn't know, i thought i was sending enough signs." Baxter said after the trees grew thicker. "I did like you to you know." I stopped looking at the forest floor at started at him. "Did? As in past tense?"
"Look, i didn't know we would be moving back here ever, so i got over you. I felt like i had to move on."
I stopped in my tracked. "I never got over you. I wrote songs about you, i'd draw you, there wasn't a day i didn't think about how much i love you..." Nelly wanted to put the words 'i love you' back in her mouth the second she said them, but Baxter looked at her more fondly. "You know Nelly, i always wonder why i didn't feel love the same after i move, and now i think it was because i didn't quite get over you. Look at you, your eyes glow like water and you still always smirk on the right side of your face. I did miss your for the first year, but i think i gave up to soon." Nelly rubbed her arm and did the smirk he mentioned. "Thats why were different but the same. Your so couragous, but you do give up. I'm so hopeful, and i don't give up, but i don't ever seem to have a lick of courage in me."
We kept on walking and talking. 30 minutes had pasted faster then i could have imagined. "Maybe we should start walking back." i mention. "Race you!" Baxter shouted and tore through the trees. "Good luck!" i call to him, easily catching up.

Baxter looked at me wih those shining brown eyes. "Your as fast as i remembe-" his voice was cut off and he disipeared. A dark hole was in the ground, and Baxter had fallen right in.
I knew what i had to do before my feet even moved. I promised to protect you! my thoughts screamed and i jumped down the dark hole in the ground after him.

With i thud i landed in mucky dirt, and i could feel Baxter next to me. "Where are we?" he called to me.
"I don't know."
I could see his shape in the dark lighting of the underground cave. "I saw the hole a second before i feel, it wasn't anywhere near you. You jumped down after me." I sat up. "I made a promise long ago to myself that i would protect you."

"Protect?" Baxter's silhouette sat against the wall of grit and mud. "Protect you. After you left i-... i felt like i didn't have a purpose anymore. Following you around like a dog was what made every day worth waking up to." Nelly said with a sigh.
Silence followed, and Nelly eventually cut through it. "We better find a way out of here or we'll miss the buss." Nelly said softly. "How?" Baxter glared at the hole in the earth above us. "We'll never make it-" Nelly cut him off abruptly, "Told you, you give up to easily." Nelly felt soil squish under her knees as she crawled around the cavern. "We need something soild for you to stand on, then you can boost me up, once i'm over i can find a branch to pull you up with." Nelly said and was aware of him staring at her in awe. "H-how did you figure that out so quickly? Baxter murmured.
"It's easy enough. Most humans don't relize what there brain and body can do. They look at something difficult and convince there brain they can't do it." Nelly explained and continued, thinking by now Baxter would think she was crazy. "I'm finding ways to bypass human nature." Nelly looked up from pushing a large rock into place under the hole in the earth. "How do you think i could withstand and recover from pain like i do?"
Baxter answered after a moment. "The lab teacher said that girls just have a higher pain tolerence then boys." Nelly glared at him. "Could you fall halfway down a cliff and just walk away from it like nothing at all? I felt that pain, and it hurt. But i can tell my brain to ignore it."

Nelly had to crawl farther and farther down the underground cave to find rocks to boost us up. Nelly could have sworn the bus had left already, but with no food or water, just being out of this cave would be best. Nelly thought she had seen something glowing in the distance, out of the corner of her eye. What now? Did i end up in Mother Mouth and thats the Moonstone. Maybe Starclan will help us out of this cave. Nelly mentally slapped myself. This is no time to make book references! Baxter needs to you get out of this cave! She followed the glowing and found something golden, half burried with time in the muddy ground.
"Baxter!" Nelly called him over, and the older boy rushed over. "What Nelly-" he probably saw the golden-ness and shut himself up. Nelly Tried to pull it out but it didn't budge, then baxter tried. Nothing. "Maybe if we both pull?" Nelly suggested, and together both of them successfully pulled the golden object from the ground.
"What is it?" Baxter exclaimed and started at the rubies and emeralds lining a golden frame. "It..." Nelly paused to pick it up and put it on her lap, "It looks like a chest." Nelly wasn't sure how, but instinctively she ran her fingers along the side of the box, then pressed a button on the corner and turned a ruby to the side. The box swung open, and inside laided two shining stones, one was magenta and it seemed to sparkle with starlight, and the other a dark blue that looked like engery was flowing inside it.
At the exact same time, Nelly and Baxter reached out, each grabing a stone in hand. Baxter took the blue one and Nelly took the pink one.
Bright light showered both of the kids and Nelly felt a tingling sensation. First, a blast of fiery heat went through her and right after the coldest cold she had ever experianced. The stone vanish into her hand and she fell over with a thud.

When Nelly woke, she felt a twig proding her in the side. She opened her eyes to find Jay standing above her and she was back above ground, afternoon sunlight shining down on her. "Jay?" Nelly said groggily, suddenly aware of the pain that seared her entire body. She could feel the pain so vividly, it was deep in her bones and muscles.
"Yes, but it's Jaylen to you, only my friends call me Jay." He grunted and poked me again with the twig. "I'm alive, stop that please." Nelly said and shakily sat up. "Wheres Baxter?"
"Over here." Baxter called out, and Nelly felt herself hurt more when she heard the pain in his voice. "It's OK Bax, i'm gonna get you back to the bus." Nelly heard Jay say as he went over to help Baxter. Jaylen sounded worried, "Did she do this to you? I knew i shouldn't have let you go off with some strange girl!"
"No, Jay, i trust her. She was once as good of a best friend to me as you are." Baxter said. Nelly felt happy that he had defended her, and stood up. It's just pain, i know i am hurt and i will get help as soon as possible. The words in her head soothed the massive pain in her body.
Jay started at me. "So you mean she knows...-" "-That i'm a murderer. Yes, she knows." Baxter finished Jay sentence. Nelly wasn't sure how to feel, that Baxter had said is deepest secret aloud.
"Lets just get ourselfs home in one piece." Nelly grunted and helped Jay get Baxter onto his wobbling feet.
"It's alright Baxter, i'm feeling just as much pain." Nelly said soothingly, and it was true. Her ability to ignore pain was only doing so much for her this time, and Jay was taking most of Baxter's weight as we hobbled out of the forest and onto the bus.
Sova and Mari, the two gossip queens of our school, started at us as if we had squirrels on our faces. Sova eventually spoke up, "What happened, to you? Your as mucky as my uncles pig farm!" And Mari was soon to follow her. "Yeah, like, were you run over by the bus while that dumb driver tried to fix it?"
"Not right now Sova and Mari." Baxter grunted. "Bother us all you want tomorrow about this, but today is just not the day for it."

"My Dream Log" ~Rivulet~

aquanight77

During the bus ride home, Nelly kept shooting worried glances at Baxter. Is he alright? Does he need my help? And for one little second, Nelly thought his eyes looked blue. Just your imagination, she thought to herself.

When it was Baxter's turn to get off the bus, Jay helped him out, and Nelly caught Baxter's eye as he limped off the bus. Only one thing was clear about the look in his eyes, they said 'tell no one'.

For the last few minutes Nelly would be on the bus, She tried to get dirt and leaves out of her hair and brush them off her clothes. At least the good ol' excuse 'i tripped in a mud puddle' always worked.

That night, Nelly couldn't sleep. It wasn't that strange considering her insomniac nature, but she couldn't stop thinking about what had gone on that afternoon. What were those stones we touched? Why did they hurt so much? Is Baxter dealing with the pain alright?
For Nelly, her pain had stopped hours ago, but she still felt a nag in her bones she couldn't describe.

When morning came, Nelly tried to look her best, or, at least how she had looked back when Baxter had been around all that time ago. Putting on a space kitten shirt and black n' bright blue striped tights, she ran out the door. I've got to see if me and Baxter are still friends! I don't care what kind, just that i get to protect him.
And her heart leaped when she saw him outside the school, but... He was surrounded. Older student's circled him, which looked like the football team in there jersey's. Jay was off the the side, held back by two of the team.
The leader off them spat in Baxter's face, and i dropped my bright green backpack. "Look you little idiot, you made a bet that our team would lose, and we won the last game, SO PAY UP!"
Baxter looked... Scared. I waved my arms at him, trying to get his attention. He saw me right away, and said, "No, Nelly! Stay back!"
The team and it's leader looked at me, and Baxter instantly looked guilty. "What do we have here, does The little cheater have a girl friend?" Nelly took 2 big steps forward, and looked at Baxter. "Permission to attack?" i called to him. "Attack? This little chipmunk is gonna fight?" the leader said disbelievingly, but Baxter gave a firm nod. My first chance to protect him! I won't let you down Baxter!
Nelly let our a roar, not like a lion's, but one more resembling a gorilla. It seemed to startle the team, and one of the younger football players shouted, "I recognize her now! She's the crazy one always locked up in the special ED room!" And what took them by surprise even more, was that i had already jumped into the leader and brought him to the ground with a massive push, and i bit down on his arm and scratched at his face. The team yelled and all rushed in at once, knocking me off. I gave the leader a swift kick in his calf and he screeched, "Lets get out of here!"
The football team scattered, leaving Jay and Baxter standing there. Jay's eyes bulged out, "Did you just send the whole football team running?" Baxter nudged him, "You get used to her craziness after a while." Baxter said, but Nelly heard a bit of surprise in his voice. "I'll walk you to your classes." She walked up to them, "What if they come back and try to finish what they started while i'm not there?" Nelly said, almost sounding like an assertive mother. Jay looked like he was about to object, but Baxter stopped him. "It's OK, i trust her."
As we all walked into school, Nelly noticed that Baxter was still just limping a bit, but when she looked down at her own feet, she realized she was still limping too.
Jay had made his way to his class, leaving Nelly and Baxter alone in the empty halls. The second Jay was out of view, Baxter put on sunglasses. "It's not that bright in here." Nelly commented, but Baxter kept walking. "Are... Are you experiencing, something weird? Like with your senses?" Nelly looked at him, "The normal, a slight head ache from all the noise-" Baxter cut Nelly off, "No, i-i just mean... Ever since the, event yesterday." Nelly blinked at him, slow to reply. "...Why?" she finally said. "Ever since we woke up in the forest," Baxter explained, "It's my eyes. Light is twice as bright as it used to be. Every little ceiling light is like another sun.

It's only getting worse to, last night it was only a sensitivity, this morning i kept rubbing my eyes, and now i feel like i need sunglasses to see."
Nelly thought over what he was saying. "What did it feel like when you touched... The stone, you touched the darker one, right?" Baxter nodded, and answered, "It felt like i was being encased in darkness, and i had spasms."
"I felt different. It felt like i was being set on fire and that i was frozen solid at the same time, and there was this huge blinding light." He experience something completely different then me. Does this mean something important?

I had the best dreams ever last night!

First one: I was StarFlight! (Not the dragon) It was amazing, I had my super suit, and even the adrenaline shots I need to spark my powers! It was so accurate. There was an alien ship, I flew over a river, i attempted to scare 2 children with my invisibility. I love this dream so much, but not as much as number two.

Second dream: We were back at the old advocates. So much told me it was a dream, but I still loved it even if it was terribly inaccurate. I was sitting my own table, when I spot Robin at a different table. Because it was still pretty accurate at this point, I was thinking, Has he finally come back?! Is this real?! Unless you've been in love, you wouldn't be able to understand how much happiness and love I was feeling. I go over and ask him, "At recess, can we talk?" He nods in reply.
As recess comes, I go around and watch him through the glass door in the meeting room. When he sees me, I didn't just look away, this time, for probably the first time, I held his gaze. I could feel my heart beating faster, and he eventually looks away and comes out soon after for recess. As we walk out the front door, I was only thinking, Ask if were still best friends! By best friends, it actually meant something more. Robin beats me to the first words.
Over the next time, I could really feel every little scrap of love for him floating back, as if it was never lost in time. He had gotten glasses as well, which made me less self conscious. I watched him through a window, and he kept returning my loving gaze. We went upstares. He sat down and explained why he was gone for so long, and floated around with happiness. (And AGAIN, levitation works it's way into my dreams) Candy scolded us, and Robin says I would never do that, I would not do anything if you told me not to. As the normal, Robin did most of the talking and I just smiled and looked derpy.

I would trade the second dream for any dream in the world, besides it coming true!

(More of this story...)

Baxter watched his old friend closely. It still felt odd, that not even moving away from Nelly for 3 years could break her crush on him. It... Broke it the other way around. He looked down at the floor, using the sunglasses to hide his eyes, and that they didn't stop glancing her way. She still has that youthfulness about her. That cheerfulness most kids loose by now. And her eyes... for a long moment he couldn't stop watching the light from the ceiling illuminate her blue eyes so it looked like sunlight dancing in water. I wonder if she knows how pretty she is.

He shook the though from his head. Baxter could have sworn he'd gotten over that dumb crush years ago. Why did it feel like they had never been apart for all this time? Nelly was the same person, minus glasses. After what seemed like hours of semi-awkwardness, ended when they reach his classroom. Nelly turned to look at him, eyes sparkling. And... Were her cheeks a bit more rosy then normal? It was always hard to tell. Nelly had never exactly blushed, it just was something her face didn't do. Baxter watched her reach her hand out towards him, then flinch back. "Sorry, I forgot for a second how much you dislike physical contact." She said in a quite voice. She looked hurt, but her face regained a smirk a few seconds later. Baxter internally struggled for a moment, but gave in soon enough. "I-it's alright this time." He whispered, and held his hand out. Nelly took her own hand and held it with his.

That night, Nelly didn't need a stuffed animal or her dog to feel safe, tucked in her own bed. Her mind was only focused on Baxter. He had let her hold his hand.
He really does love me. Baxter had never let anyone touch him. He hated people touching him. And yet she had held his hand.
Nelly went to sleep soundly that night. Baxter loves her. That's the only thing in the world that mattered.

Baxter woke up that morning, his eyes blaring. Sunlight was leaking through the window and into his eyes. He reached out to grab his sunglasses, but they weren't on his dresser where he'd left them. Squinting, Baxter crawled out of bed and searched the house. He looked everywhere, under beds, in the living room, in the kitchen. Nowhere.

He had to go to school that morning without sunglasses on. Boy did his eye sting. He finally found Nelly after lunch and pulled her aside into the library. "My eyes hurt! Nelly, i couldn't find my sunglasses and my eyes are killing me!" She smiled at him, her gaze so soft. "I have a baseball hat in my locker, you can use that." They walked together, and Nelly pulled up the topic of the stones again. "I did some research last night. It took some while to find anything, but a book mentioned that stones similar to ours were in Egyptian mythology. That they were gifts to the original royal family from the gods. But after the second dynasty, the trail completely stops. I bet that the original family wanted to keep them for themselves and had the stones hidden-" Nelly was cut off. "Yeah, but Nelly," Baxter interrupted, "The Egyptian gods don't exist..."
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

"I don't think so. Egyptian gods make more sense then the God in the Bible." Baxter was taken a back. "How does that make more sense then what a majority of the population believes in?" Nelly looked at him fondly. "It just does. It's just like how I'm drawn to starlight and water. Some things just make more sense in your heart."
